Accept pointing, speech, eye gaze, sign, gesture, partner-assisted scanning or a communication device. A partner may mark the choice.

Observe actual participation and support. A completed game does not certify independent workplace performance.

Job Interview Basics

30-minute lesson plan

Objective: Practice an introduction, a strength with an example, and asking for clarification in an interview.

Minutes	Teaching activity
0-3	Preview the job skill with pictures. Invite supported responses.
3-12	Play the six-minute lesson. Pause at the eight worksheet answers and discuss examples.
12-18	Play the six-question review. Reveal, discuss, encourage and retry.
18-27	Practice an approved school task with a supervisor.
27-30	Reflect, record observed support, and select the next step.

Real-world practice

Role-play a short interview with a trusted adult. Introduce yourself using speech or supported communication, share a strength and example, ask a question, and thank the interviewer.

CDC and communication adaptations

Offer two picture choices, one direction at a time, an adult model and extra wait time. Accept pointing, eye gaze, sign, partner-assisted scanning, speech or a communication device. Do not require handwriting. Provide breaks and respect sensory needs.

Materials

Screen or projector, optional audio, standard or picture worksheet, approved classroom materials and a supervisor.

0:00 - An interview is a conversation

A job interview is a conversation about a job and how you could do it. Today, Jordan practices with a school supervisor. You may use speech, sign, pictures, notes, or a communication device. You can ask about communication supports ahead of time. There is no single perfect personality for an interview. Practice can help you know what to expect.

0:30 - Introduce yourself - Worksheet 1

Introduce yourself at the beginning of the conversation. Jordan says, hello, I am Jordan. Thank you for meeting with me. You might show an introduction card or use a device instead. Use a greeting that feels comfortable and respectful. Eye contact and handshakes are not the only ways to show attention. Ask your teacher to practice an introduction with you.

1:00 - Share your name clearly - Worksheet 2

Tell the interviewer your name in the way you communicate best. Jordan points to a name card while speaking. In school practice, use a pretend name if your teacher asks you to. You do not need to share private details such as a password, account number, or medical history to practice an introduction. Keep the conversation focused on the job.

1:30 - Choose a useful strength - Worksheet 3

A strength is something you do well or are learning to do well. Jordan says, I am careful when I sort supplies. Other strengths could include being helpful, learning routines, noticing details, or asking clear questions. Choose a strength that connects to the job. You do not have to claim that you can do everything without help.

2:00 - Give an example - Worksheet 4

Give an example that shows your strength in action. Jordan explains, I used a picture list to prepare three supply kits and checked each kit with my teacher. This tells the interviewer what Jordan actually did. You can talk about school, home, volunteering, or a practice job. It is okay to describe support you used while learning.

2:30 - Watch a practice answer

The supervisor asks, why would you be a good supply helper? Jordan pauses, looks at a note card, and answers: I like organizing. Last week, I sorted folders using picture labels. Notice the two parts: a useful strength and a real example. A short, honest answer is enough. You can prepare a card or a device message before the interview.

3:00 - Listen to the question - Worksheet 5

Listen to the whole question before answering. The interviewer may speak, sign, or provide a written question. Give yourself time to understand it. Jordan waits for the question to finish, then looks at a reminder card. If you need more processing time, you can ask for a moment. You do not need to rush because someone else speaks quickly.

3:30 - Ask for help or clarification - Worksheet 6

Ask for help or clarification if a question is unclear. Jordan says, could you repeat that, or show me an example? This is useful communication. You may use a help card, gesture, or communication device. An interview is also a chance to learn what support the workplace can offer. Practice asking in a way that works for you.

4:00 - Ask a job question - Worksheet 7

A question from you can help you understand the job. Jordan asks, what tasks would I do first, and who would show me how? You could ask about the schedule, training, tools, or communication supports. Choose a question that helps you decide whether the job is a good fit. Your needs and interests matter in this conversation too.

4:30 - Thank the interviewer - Worksheet 8

Thank the interviewer at the end. Jordan says, thank you for explaining the job. You can sign, speak, or use your communication device. If you want to know the next step, ask how you will hear about it. A polite ending does not require physical contact. Afterward, reflect with a trusted adult on what felt clear and what you want to practice.

5:00 - Practice a short conversation

With your teacher, try a short pretend interview. Introduce yourself, name one strength, and give one example. Ask for clarification if you need it, then ask a question about the work. A partner can model an answer first. You may read a card, point to a picture, or use a device. Practice should help you feel prepared, not judged.

5:30 - Bring your own way of communicating

An interview is a two-way conversation. Your strengths, questions, and communication needs belong in it. You practiced an introduction, a strength, an example, listening, asking for help, asking a question, and giving thanks. Try the review game with unlimited retries. Then decide with your teacher which part of a real or practice interview you would like to work on next.
